Don Hanson here again. I apologize for venting as I had a girl rip my head off for over an hour today about how her tax dollars aren't supporting offensive signs on public property. I was trying to research on your site any specific regulations on sidewalk usage. Nothing about signs of influence etc and also have read that there only needs to be a 4 ft path for folks to pass thru. I didn't realize you could take half of the sidewalk for business use as long as there was a thru way. I do think it is a privilege and abused to be able to leave set up like that and also to close the street every weekend. It does make our business tougher to run since Saturday is always the big day for everyone. That's just the breaks. I'm not really groaning at Mike's Urban woody I kind of enjoy the atmosphere that it creates and he's trying hard to make it happen. Also we are investigating a stair well maybe 6 ft wide entrance down into the basement at some time and if 4 ft clearance of sidewalk is all that is required by the city for passageway. I came to zoning a few years back with a financed ready to install digital led sign on the building and they said they would come and have it torn down. I hear the rules have changed since then. Been trying to read the zoning regulations posted but it is really a challenge. Is there specific info about sidewalk use by owners, the does and don'ts and also what might be the regulations on putting a stairwell back into an area that was previously a basement entrance on the south side of the property. Sorry again as this started out over an argument that turned into questions about sidewalk usage and what is permitted. Any input would be appreciated and thanks for your time and putting up with me. A trying day. Don
